Our trusted voices: A necessary and unique resource to address the climate crisis—a public health emergency

Climate change is creating a public health crisis of almost unimaginable proportions. To avert this crisis, humanity must reinvent the world's energy and food systems over the next decade; if successful, this will not only limit global warming, it will also greatly improve public health and wellbeing. The trusted voice of health professionals is a necessary and unique resource that must be fully-harnessed to ensure that humanity will rise to this challenge.
